How Kindness In Business Pays Off

By Dr. Mark Skovron

winning in today's world. Why? Because most people are naturally generous, and generosity is infectious. In the retail sector, Target, Starbucks and Chick-Fil-A come to my mind. These companies seem to attract a higher caliber employee, and it is obvious that they have taught their coworkers to create an actual experience and culture for the consumers of their products. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship. What are YOU building today?	\square	Businesses that differentiate themselves through kindness and teach and enforce it in all its forms in the workplace are These companies seem to attract a higher caliber employee, and it is obvious that they have taught their coworkers to create an actual experience and culture for the consumers of their products. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		winning in today's world. Why? Because most people are naturally generous, and generosity is infectious. In the retail create an actual experience and culture for the consumers of their products. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		sector, Target, Starbucks and Chick-Fil-A come to my mind.
future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.	\Box	These companies seem to attract a higher caliber employee, and it is obvious that they have taught their coworkers to
It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		create an actual experience and culture for the consumers of their products. It pays off now and will pay off more into the companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		future since consumers want more and more to be associated with companies that are generous.
have increasing buying power in the coming years. At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.	\bigcap	It pays off now and will pay off more into the future since consumers want more and more to be associated with
At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		companies that are generous. This is especially true for those in the generation z and the millennial groups, who will only environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		have increasing buying power in the coming years.
off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business. It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		At MaxGroup we teach all our coworkers to display acts of gratefulness, generosity and respect within the work It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		environment, and to our consumers in every situation. People don't want to buy from companies they feel are ripping them workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		off. And employees don't want to work for those types of companies, either. It's just not good business.
we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		It is interesting that when you create and model an environment that is genuinely kind, and demonstrates gratitude in the searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.		workplace, it can only naturally spill over to all coworkers, and the customer then benefits. At MaxGroup Business Solutions, we do not attempt to sell or "close" anything. We concentrate on providing the answers and solutions that the consumer is What are YOU building today?		searching for, and our focus is always on building a quality long-term relationship.
		What are YOU building today?