PR Checklist for Startups: 15 Things to Do Before Your Product Launch

Google "PR" and "startups" and you're likely to find articles from high-profile entrepreneurs like Mark Cuban telling you why you shouldn't hire one—and the tech community tends to agree.

13. I know what my approximate budget is for a PR & communications launch campaign
12. To the best of my knowledge, I don't have any inappropriate photos, images or comments displayed across my social media channels
11. I'm no longer just prototyping—I'm ready to grow and scale
10. I can also tell you WHY my customers are buying my product/service
9. I can tell you what a day in the life of my customer looks like
8. I've spoken with my potential customers one-on-one and conducted user interviews to get feedback on my product/service
7. Any key stakeholders required for me to deliver my product/service are already onboard
6. My business partners and team are all aligned with the company's vision and strategy
5. I've completed a business model canvas or have an existing business strategy for review
4. I can describe my multiple customer segments, and why my product/service is a good solution for each of them
3. I can define the type of market I'm entering into
2. My product/service fills a need in either a sizable or growing market
1. My business idea is based on providing a product or service for an existing customer problem

15. I know what success looks like, and I can explain it to you

checkli.com