- 1 Shift your focus toward your listeners and away from yourself.
- 2 Asking yourself, "What are people waiting to hear from you?"
- 3 Keep answers succinct and clear.
- 4 3 easy to remember steps to get your points across without rambling: State the problem, describe the solution and summarize the benefits.
- 5 Use a "what, so what, now what?" mental road map—stating the issue or topic, explaining why it matters and laying out next steps.
- 6 Practice speaking off the cuff: Speak up in meetings, volunteer to give toasts or step up to the mic to ask a question at a conference.
- 7 Be aware of your body language under stress and avoid misleading tells.
- 8 Treat your anxiety as a normal response and tell yourself: I'm excited.

- 9 Breathe: focus on the exhale.
- 10 Pace Yourself: Take a whole body approach to speaking, control and grounding your speech in your natural rhythm.
- 11 Move From Your Center: Move from your core—not just your arms, to control nervous hand gestures.
- 12 Stretch Your Vowels: Focus on stretching out your vowels, slurring your sounds together, so you sound sharp and clear.
- 13 Stand Solid: Put one foot slightly ahead of the other—shoulder width apart to avoid swaying from side to side.

Public Speaking Tips That to Reduce Anxiety and Improve Your Performance from Harvard <https://www.extension.harvard.edu/professional-development/blog/10-tips-improving-your-public-speaking-skills>

- 14 Practice and Prepare: Take the time to go over your notes and practice presenting your speech - record yourself, or get a friend to watch and provide feedback.
- 15 Know Your Audience: Learn about your listeners and create your speech for them.
- 16 Organize Your Material: Grab the audience's attention in the first 30 seconds.
- 17 Adapt to Audience Feedback: Watch your audience and adjust your presentation to their response to you.
- 18 Be Yourself: Let your personality shine through so your audience will trust you.
- 19 Tell Stories: A story provides a personal touch in a speech that audiences like.
- 20 Don't Read: Maintain eye contact with the audience and use a brief outline to jog your memory and keep you on task.
- 21 Control Nervous Gestures: Use nonverbal communication that delivers your message.
- 22 Limit AV Aids: Audiovisual aids can distract your audience so use them sparingly to enhance or clarify your content.
- 23 Start and End Your Speech with Strong Messages: Capture your audience right from the start with a bold stat or story, not a canned introduction. Conclude your speech with a strong summary.
