

How to Create Effective Study Habit: 5 Fantastic Steps

Good study habits help you reach your academic goals. They are specific to you and the goal you want to reach.

1. Select A Study Habit

- List activities you can do regularly to reach an academic goal.
- Think about activities that suit your learning style.
- Choose the time of day you'll do your habit.

2. Define The Study Habit

- Create 3 parts to your habit:
- Trigger: something that starts the activity
- Action: the activity that you do. It's the main part of your habit
- Reward: a way to treat yourself.

3. Repeat It Daily

- Do it every day at the same time.
- Some say it takes 28 days to acquire a habit, others 30, 60 or 90 days.
- Try 30 days and see the progress you make. Don't skip any days!

4. Track Your Study Habit

- Write notes about your habit in a journal or tracker everyday for 30 days
- Include columns for the number of days, the date, trigger, action, reward and comments you have.

5. Evaluate The Habit

- After 30 days assess whether or not the habit is automatic
- If not continue to do it and track your habit.
- See if it's effective and helps you reach your academic goal.
- If it is automatic and effective, keep up the good study habit!
